

EVERYONE DESERVES TO READ THE SEASHORE PHILOSOPHY

The Seashore Philosophy is an awesome celebration of thoughts and feelings written by one of the deepest thinkers I have had the pleasure of reading, Sunnie Kidd. Sunnie's description of San Francisco's famous treasure, Ocean Beach, is nothing short of beauty and genius, like I imagine the author. Her story reaches out to the reader like the tide itself. The smells and the sounds are as real as if you were there with her. I think I know most of the people she describes that "collect together, everyday, like shells on the beach." What brilliant writing, with live rhythm, rocking you back and forth, changing and rearranging all the time.

How many times have I stood at this same beach and stared into the same (Kidd) "reflecting pond"? I don't know!

I buried my Mother's ashes, at the waters edge six years ago, in the same place Sunnie describes. This was Mom's final request.

So for me, Sunnie's story is that much more real. I believe that everyone has an Ocean Beach; the place they go to when the world seems so large and unexplainable.

I also appreciate Chuang Tzu's philosophy, Sunnie cites "there is life, there is death, there is coming out and going back and its form is never seen," like the ocean, like life. There is so much more to this article than even what is written. When I was done reading I wanted to read it again and again.

Everyone deserves to read The Seashore Philosophy.

Thank you so much for sharing.
