

Every aspect of this book is vivid in its description regardless of what is being written. It is a lifetime of doing what was most enjoyable and satisfying to each other. I liked the passage described as “elective affinity” which elucidates reasons why we sometimes are agreeable with another human being instantaneously. Knowing Sunnie as I did my view of the book is a reality description of her life, how she lived it, what she did and in so doing she described clearly each aspect of her experience as she lived each day. It is what Sunnie called “purple prose.”

This is philosophy of life that I can see someone reading on public transportation. It is enjoyable reading talking about life in an understandable way.

Mary G. Caruso
Writer